I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep

(Jn 10:11).

Images of biblical culture and references to the slow pace of nomadic and pastoral life seem far removed from our daily needs for efficiency and competitiveness. Yet we too sometimes feel the need to pause, to find a place to rest and to encounter someone who welcomes us just as we are.

Jesus presents himself as the one who, more than anyone else, is ready to welcome us and offer us rest: indeed he is ready to give his life for each one of us.

In the long passage of John's Gospel from which this word of life is taken, he assures us that he is the presence of God in the history of each person just as the prophets promised to the people of Israel ¹.

Jesus is the shepherd and guide who knows and loves his sheep; that is, he knows and loves his weary and sometimes lost people. He is not a stranger who ignores the needs of the flock, nor a thief who comes to steal, nor a brigand who kills and scatters, nor a mercenary who acts only out of self-interest.

I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep.

The flock that Jesus considers to be his own certainly consists of his disciples and all those who have already received the gift of baptism but there are others too. Jesus knows every human being; he calls them by name and tenderly cares for each one.

He is the true shepherd who guides us towards life and searches for us whenever we go astray ². What is more, he has already given his life so that the will of the Father could be fulfilled. God's will is for us to experience the fullness of personal fellowship and union with him and recover the sense of all being brothers and sisters, both of which were fatally wounded by sin.

Each of us can try to recognize God's voice, hear his word addressed to us and trustingly follow it. Above all, we can be sure that we are loved, understood and forgiven unconditionally by the one who tells us:

I am the good shepherd.
The good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep.

When, at least in a small way, we experience this silent but powerful presence in our lives, the desire to share this and grow in our capacity to care and welcome others begins to burn in our hearts. Following Jesus' example, we can try to know and better understand the members of our family, our colleagues and our neighbours: we can begin to allow other people's needs to disturb our peaceful lives.

Love can give us a great imagination: we can find ways of involving others in what we do and new ways of engaging with them. In our own small way, we can contribute to building fraternal and open communities, capable of patiently and courageously accompanying many others on their journey through life.

Meditating on this same phrase from the Gospel, Chiara Lubich wrote: "Jesus openly said of himself: 'No one has greater love than this: to lay down one's life for one's friends' (Jn 15:13). And he lived his offering to the full. His love is self-sacrificing. It is a love made up of a real willingness to offer, to give one's life. God asks us too ... for acts of love that have (at least in our intention and decision) the measure of his love... Only this kind of love is Christian love: not any kind of love, not a coating of love, but a love so great that it puts life itself at stake... By doing this, our lives as Christians will take a qualitative leap, a great qualitative leap forward. And then we will see men and women from every corner of the earth gather around Jesus, attracted by his voice."³

Each month the Focolare chooses a Scripture passage as a guide and inspiration for daily living. The commentary on it was originally written by founder, Chiara Lubich (1920–2008). Today it is written by an international commission and translated into 96 different languages, reaches several million people worldwide.
